Unlimited and Boundless Compassion: Love Your Enemies!

Dear people of God, we celebrate the Seventh Sunday in Ordinary Time (C). Our readings for this Sunday draw our attention to the reality that in Baptism we are called to mirror and image the mercy and forgiveness the Lord has won for us. God’s love is so overwhelming: He loves us totally, however hateful, sinful, and unworthy we are. There is no better way to express this love in our own lives except by modelling ourselves on Christ, the heavenly man, and loving our enemies as He loves them. It is then that we are most like our Father in heaven. As David would not harm Saul his enemy, so are we challenged to love and pardon those who wrong us.

The first and the Gospel readings can be considered as a manual on loving enemies. Loving enemies is more than an attitude. It is expressed in actions such as: “do good to those who hate you”; in speech as: “bless those who curse you”; and in prayer as: “pray for those who maltreat you”. To love is to reach out: even to enemies. It is a contradiction to want to reach out and at the same time remain defensive. Our defensiveness, which is our natural reaction toward enemies, must be put aside if we deem it fit to reach out to them in love. Thus, Jesus teaches His disciples to love differently from what is the normal way of loving. The world usually invites people to love those who love them and to repay evil for evil. However, Jesus’ disciples are to use goodness of heart to overcome evil in the world and in their lives because they have seen the example of God Himself. Christians are called to love their enemies in thought, deed, word, and prayer. They begin by forgiving and giving. Love is revolutionary and can turn the world upside down. This love demands forgiveness, unselfish, disinterested, and unconditional love for one’s enemies.

In the first reading, David had a golden opportunity to do away with Saul, his arch-enemy who was after his life, but David did not harm Saul. Even when Abishai told him, “God has delivered your enemy into our grasp today”, David refused to follow such wicked counsel. David’s example of mercy and compassion is what the Gospel reading highlights. Jesus takes the opportunity to give us one of the most difficult commands of our Christian religion: “Love your enemies, do good to those who hate you, bless those who curse you, pray for those who mistreat or abuse you”. These are hard lessons for flesh and blood. But if we are thoroughly grounded in the faith of Christ’s love, this will make His commands easy for us. Everyone who comes to Him for washing in His blood, and knows the greatness of the mercy and the love found in Jesus can say, Lord, what will you have me do? It is only when we begin to live Christ’s way that we can start to build a new world. To mirror and put on the image of Jesus means wearing the garments of mercy, love, kindness, compassion, forgiveness, and meekness. If we do these, we are acting in accordance with our spiritual nature. Only then are we truly children of God.

Jesus proposes an active non-violent way to resolve misunderstandings, conflicts and problems. He advises against violent revenge and invites us to accept the fact that evil cannot overcome evil. Only good can overcome evil. He not only forbids the use of violence towards our enemies but demands active love. There is a kind of non-violence that is ignoring the other persons. Nothing bad is done to them, nothing good is done either. Hence, the Golden Rule: “Do to others what you would like them to do unto you”. Followers of Jesus are not just to avoid violent revenge or retaliation, but they are to bless even those who curse them; to put the wrong-doer to shame by turning the other cheek; to be ready to give away the precious and indispensable outer coat and the inner shirt; and to be generous to those who ask for help. The list is not exhaustive but it shows that in the face of verbal, physical, social, and legal violence, the answer is always the same: namely, overcoming evil with good. We are not asked to condone wrong-doing, evil, and injustice in our families, communities, and societies, but to fight against them by using love as a weapon. Christians are to aim to be merciful, just as our heavenly Father is merciful to us. A clear indication that the actions required of us have precedence and we are beneficiaries.

Arguably, we all would like other people to change. We think that if only the others were to change, our society would also change. Jesus shows us that the first person to change is each one of us in a very personal way, deep down in our hearts. Only such a thorough change will prepare the way for a real and lasting reformation of society and our communities. For this inner transformation to take place, we need to let go of what our heart holds on to so firmly in order to love our enemies as our neighbours genuinely. Christ wants His followers to be the first to take the initiative to break the spiral of violence. To love our enemies is the best proof that we are adopted children of God. We ought to be careful when we blame others, for we need allowances ourselves. If we possess a giving and forgiving spirit, we shall ourselves reap the benefits. Jesus has given us a detailed explanation of how to love our enemies. Look at the Crucified Christ and love accordingly. Let God handle your enemies. Yours is to keep praying for them.

We encourage parishioners to come and support our Sister Victoria Addai, FST, and her colleagues as they profess their Final Vows at Ahenema-Kokoben at 9:00 am on Saturday, 1st March 2025, and her Thanksgiving Mass at KNUST at 10:00 am, on Sunday, 2nd March 2025.

My dear Students, we keep encouraging you to make the Chaplaincy environment an essential part of your life as you stay on Campus and its environs. Make the best out of every programme you are studying: it will surely lead you to your glorious destiny. We are called to be merciful as our heavenly Father is merciful. We must love differently from what is the normal way of loving: use goodness to overcome evil, following the example of God. We wish you all the best as go through the Mid-Semester Exams. Be of good conduct, do your best and God will surely crown your efforts with success. Please, do take good care of yourselves! May God’s Grace be with us throughout this Semester. Pax!

Please remember to stay well, healthy, and safe. Do not be afraid to attend Mass. Observe the safety protocols. Your life is dear to us.

Have a Blessed and Fruitful Week.

God bless and keep you safe.

Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, Pray for Us.
